Canada Heritage Arts Grants

By Misty Faucheux, eHow Contributor

Canadian Heritage is a national program that promotes Canadian culture and citizenship participation. The goal is to reinforce the relationships amongst all Canadians. The Canada Council for the Arts (CCA) falls under the Canadian Heritage umbrella. This group's goals are to promote and foster Canadian arts. The CCA also provides art grants.

Grants to Media Artists

The Grants to Media Artists program provides grants to film, video, new media, audio and aboriginal media artists. The program also provides grants to New Media Residences, which allows artists to collaborate with other established artists and people associated with emerging technologies.

Another grant within the Grants to Media Artists program is the Travel Grants to Media Artists. This grant allows Canadian media artists, curators and art critics to travel outside of their home town to go to events or other activities associated with their art.

Grants to Media Arts Production Organizations/Media Arts Commissioning Program

The Media Arts Commissioning Program provides support to Canadian artists who are creating works that will be presented locally, nationally or internationally. The grants go to Canadian artists who are expressing themselves using film, video, new media or audio.

These grants can be used to pay for production costs, promotion fees and artist or commission fees.

Grants to Media Arts Dissemination/Annual Assistance to Distribution Organizations

The Assistance to Distribution Organizations provides grants to Canadian non-profits run by artists who distribute media arts. The organization must promote Canadian artists who create films, videos, new media or audio art.

This grant is generally a two-year grant. It assists with the costs of distribution, promotions and administration.
